Handmade Jewelry Lights Up
When Fiancé Is Nearby

Engineer Ben Kokes has created an LED engagement ring that glows when a wearer's fiancé is close. Kokes built the ring himself and incorporated an LED and copper coil assembly inside, which illuminates the ring from inside when it gets within the proximity of an induced alternating magnetic field, a device he refers to as 'the transmitter,' which can be worn as an armband. According to Kokes, the original plan was to present the ring to his fiancé and then go to a professional jeweler to get something more permanent, but his fiancée insisted on changing the design of the ring to make it more permanent.
